The Tough Armor case from Spigen is a new product from the company. Its two-piece construction is made of abrasion-resistant thermoplastic and a reinforcing polycarbonate frame. Inside the case, there is a filling made of technological foam that provides an additional layer of protection against impacts and falls of the device. The case features a kickstand, allowing for effortless viewing of what's happening on the phone's display without the need to hold it. The case is perfectly fitted and does not restrict wireless charging capabilities. The slightly raised design around the camera and screen protects it from scratches by lifting the phone just above flat surfaces. It has button covers and cutouts for ports. The Tough Armor is a case that has undergone durability testing for drops, 26 times from a height of up to 1.2m, thus receiving the American military standard certification MIL-STD 810G-516.6.
